Background

Twananani Textiles, a cooperative based in Mbhokota village near Elim, Limpopo, is a beacon of Tsonga culture and craftsmanship.

Established in 1983 by a group of 29 visionary women, it is situated proudly as part of the Ribola Art Route. Initially formed to create employment and preserve Tsonga cultural traditions, Twananani Textiles has evolved into a hub of cultural fusion, combining heritage and entrepreneurship. Over the past four decades, it has supported numerous families, enchanting both South Africans and international tourists with its unique creations.

From its inception, under the mentorship of photographer Anna Collins, Twananani Textiles has specialized in block printing and batik, a traditional Indonesian textile art. The cooperative, though smaller now with eight women and two youths, continues to produce a range of hand-dyed or painted fabrics, traditional clothing, and décor items, showcasing Tsonga and Venda cultures.
